

COMMUNITY TRAGEDIES: THE HOSPICE RESPONSE

DESCRIPTION:

Recent tragedies have caused many who work in hospice or a field related to death and dying to wonder how they would, or should, respond if a traumatic event occurred in their community. Perhaps you are feeling an increased obligation to be prepared and able to respond and wonder where you might obtain more training or be most helpful. Having participated in community crises at both national and local levels, Dr. Patti Anewalt will talk about how community tragedies have influenced our society's understanding of grief in recent years. She will address the phases of community tragedies, possible levels of involvement, as well as the reasons for and ways to obtain additional training.
